NOTICE.

THE appearance of a new edition of the dictionary of the French Academy, in 1835, suggested to the celebrated publisher Didot, of Paris, the idea of issuing an improved edition of the well known dictionary of Chambaud. Professor Fleming, formerly Professor of English in the College Louis le Grand, and Professor Tibbins, author of several lexicographical works, to whom the dictionary was entrusted, found it necessary, however, to make so many additions, that the publishers thought a new title ought in justice to the editors to be adopted.

It may be sufficient to say, in presenting the present dictionary to the public, that it is based on the New Royal Dictionary of Professors Fleming and Tibbins, which is allowed, by all competent authorities, to be the most copious and comprehensive that has ever appeared.

The student and reader of French must be constantly impressed with the inadequacy of the dictionaries accessible to him as representatives of the present state of the language; and with the omission of numerous words that are at this time in constant use; many of which have been introduced in very modern periods. In the dictionary of Professors Fleming and Tibbins these omissions are supplied; and it has been the anxious endeavour of the American editor to add such terms in Natural History, Medicine, Chemistry, &c., as had not been introduced by those learned gentlemen. To these terms an asterisk (*) has been prefixed; and in general the particular science to which they belong has been designated.

The tables of the verbs by Mr. Picot have been added, as being calculated to facilitate the study of this difficult part of the French language. In these tables—it will be seen—the verbs are numbered, and so arranged as to show, at a glance, the formation of the various tenses—simple and compound; the irregularities; and modes of conjugation—affirmatively, negatively, and interrogatively. To the different verbs, as they occur in the body of the dictionary, a number is affixed referring to the tables; and as their pronunciation is distinctly indicated, the work may be considered as affording a complete and ready means of ascertaining the modes of conjugation, and the pronunciation of the verbs of the French language in all their forms—a desideratum not to be found in any other publication of the same nature.

Philadelphia, November, 1843.

EXPLANATION

OF

THE TABLE OF SIMPLE SOUNDS.

bàr, bât. bâse, ântique: thère, êbb, ovêr, jêûne, mêute, bêurre, liên: fleld, flg, vin: rôbe, rôb, lôrd, môod, hôod, vôs, mon: bûse, bût, brun.

A Table of the simple sounds, to which all the French vowels and diphthongs are referred, by the figures over the letters in the Dictionary.

| French sounds. | | English sounds. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| A, | Long in bàs, | bâr. | p. 5. |
| | Short in bal, | bât. | |
| E, | Close in côté, | bâse. | p. 6. |
| | Open grave in après | thère. | p. 6. |
| | Open acute in trompette, | êbb. | |
| | Guttural in refûs, | ovêr. | p. 7. |
| I, | Long in gîte, | fleld. | p. 8. |
| | Short in ami, | flg. | |
| O, | Long-open in trône, | rôbe. | p. 8. |
| | Short in noble, | rôb. | |
| | Long-broad in aurore | lôrd. | |
| | Open-short in vôs. | | |
| OU, | Long in roule, | môod. | p. 8. |
| | Short in boule | hôod. | |
| U, | Long in bûse. | | p. 8. |
| | Short in bût. | | |
| EU, | Long-close in jêûne. | | p. 8. |
| | Short in mêute. | | |
| | Long-broad in bêurre. | | p. 7. |
| AN or EN, | Long in ântique. | | p. 6. |
| | Short-slender in liên. | | |
| IN, | Long in vin. | | p. 8. |
| ON, | Long in mon. | | p. 8. |
| UN, | Long in brun. | | p. 9. |

A Table of the consonants which, in the similar spelling, must be constantly articulated as follows.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| b, as in | bag, rob. | n, as in | not, can. |
| d, as in | done, nod. | n, denotes a | nasal sound. |
| f, as in | fig, roof. | p, as in | put, up. |
| g, as in | go, bag. | r, as in | robe, or. |
| g, as in | guard.* | s, as in | safe, yes. |
| g-n, as in | magnificent. | sh, as in | shore, ash. |
| gn, as in | poignant. | t, as in | table, bit. |
| h. See page | 9. | v, as in | vine, love. |
| k, as c in | corn, music. | w, as in | wag. |
| k, as c in | card.* | y, as in | yes. |
| l, as in | lad, eel. | z, as in | zone, size. |
| l, as gl in | seraglio. | z, as in | azure. |
| m, as in | man, am. | | |

* The g and k in italic type dênote that, between them and the following vowel, a sound like e or y is interposed, the better to unite the letters, and soften a little their hard articulation. This softened articulation of the hard c and k, and g, is noticed in Steele's Gram., p. 49; reproved in Nare's Orth., p. 28, as "a monster of pronunciation only heard on the English stage." It is given as polite pronunciation by Mr. Walker, who, in his Pronouncing Dictionary, p. 13 and 21, directs us to pronounce card, guard, kind, etc., as if spelt ke-hard, ghe-ard, or gyard, kyind, etc. This intermediate sound is very obvious in cue and argue, which are not pronounced kou and argou, but as if a k or g were articulated before the pronoun you, so that kyou and argyou offer the same sounds as cue and argue.

The sound of this y between the k or g and the diphthong ou, is precisely that which the French interpose between them and their u, as in curé, légume, and which they frequently express by an u after q, or before their e and ɛ as in manqué, quête, vainqueur, guette, guide, rigueur, etc., wherein these letters are less hard than in corps, garde, though harder than in cet, cité géne, gîte.

Directions for using the similar sounds and articulations.

1. The figures over the vowels mark their respective sounds. To have them perfect they must be stripped of their attending consonants, without losing any part of their peculiar sounds.

2. Two vowels in the same syllable are to be pronounced together, and the first shorter than the second. Thus in plâ-tâ, the similar sounds for piété, the l must be united with â, precisely as, in the word osier, the i is united with er.

3. i marked with the figure 1, is equivalent to ie in field.

4. oo in the same syllable have a single figure, to show that they express a single sound, as in môod or hôod.

5. In nouns of the singular number, the final vowel marked 2, undergoes the same change in the plural; thus â-mi, trâ-zôr, similar sounds of a-mi, trésor, become in the plural â-mi, trâ-zôr.

6. The standards that have a u, or an n in italic type, are peculiar to the French language. Look to them as directed in the foregoing table.

7. When u has no figure, it makes, with the vowel e, one of the sounds of the diphthong eu in jêûne, mêute, bêurre.

8. The three nasal sounds that have no figure never vary.

9. An adjective or participle, whose feminine is not noticed in the similar spelling, is pronounced in the same manner for both genders, except the sound of â, which is somewhat longer for the feminine.

10. The syllables are divided as they are heard in conversation, and not as they are counted in poetry.

EXAMPLES.

Veiller, vê-lâ. The figure 2 above the e refers to the e in ebb; the figure 3 above the a refers to the a in base; and the l in italic refers to the articulation of gl in the word seraglio. In the locution veiller à sa conduite, where er is followed by a vowel, its figured pronunciation would be vê-lêr. See page 7, col. 2, termination er.

Poignard, pwâ-gnâr. The figure 2 above the a, in both syllables, refers to a in bat; the gn without a hyphen, refers to gn in the word poignant.

Baguenaude, bâg-nôd. The figure 2 above the a refers to the a in bat; the figure 1 above the o refers to the o in robe; the g separated from the n by a hyphen refers to the gn in the word magnificent.

Guerre, gêr. The figure 1 above the e refers to the e in there; and the g in italic refers to the g in the word guard, as pronounced by Walker. See note immediately below the table of the consonants.

Jour, zôor. The figure 4 above the first o refers to the oo in mood; the z in italic refers to the z as pronounced in the word azure.

RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION

OF THE

FRENCH VOWELS AND DIPHTHONGS.

CHIEFLY COLLECTED FROM THE

PROSODY OF L'ABBE D'OLIVET,

AND FROM THE BEST WRITERS ON THE SUBJECT.

A has two sounds. It is long in bās, and short in băl. The English have the first sound in bar, and the second in bat.

It is long in the alphabet, but short when it is a verb or preposition: il ă, he has; ă, to.

It is short in the beginning of a word, except in ācre, āge, āffres, āgnus, āme, āne, āpre, ārrhes, ās, and in their derivatives, ācreté, āgé, etc.

It is short at the end of words, papă, aimă, chantă. In those taken from foreign languages, it is something between long and short, as in sofa, agenda, etc.

Abe is long only in astrolābe and crābe.*

Able is long in most verbs and substantives,† except tăble and érăble, wherein it is short, as in all adjectives, according to M. D'Olivet; and doubtful, according to M. Féraud. Custom seems to be in favour of the latter.‡

Abre is long, even before a masculine§ termination: sābre, sābrer, etc.

Ac. General rules: All final syllables are short, when followed by any consonant except s, z, or x: săc, nectăr, sĕl, pŏt, ŭf, etc.

All masculine syllables, long or short in the singular number, are always long in the plural: des sācs, des sēls, des pōts, etc.

All masculine nouns that end their singular number with s, z, or x, are long: le tēmps, le nēz, la voīx, etc.

Ace is long only in grāce, espāce, délāce, lāce, entrelāce.

Ache is long only in lāche, tāche (a task), gāche, relāche, māche, fāche, and in the verbs derived from them, even before a masculine syllable: lācher, relāchons, etc.

Acle is long only in rācle, il débācle; doubtful in all others.

Acre is long only in ācre (sharp, sour).

Ade is always short: aubăde, făde, etc.

Adre is short only in lădre, long in all other words, even before a masculine syllable: cādre, cādrer, etc.

Afe, aphe, are always short: carăfe, épităphe, etc

Affres, afre, are long only in āffres and bāfre.

Afle is long even before a masculine syllable: răfle, răfler, etc.

Age is long only in āge.

Agne is long only in gāgne, and all the tenses of the verb gāgner.

Ague is always short: băgue, dăgue, etc.

Aï, a false diphthong, which admits of the three sounds of the masculine e, has the sound of the close é only in j'āi, je sāis, tu sāis, bāi; of the open acute é in the middle, and at the end of words, except in essaï, délaï, vraï, wherein it is doubtful, according to some; long and open, according to others; and of the open grave è, when followed by e, s, rs, ts, re, and when it has the circumflex accent; plaïe, jamaïs, païrs, portraïts, faïre, faïte, etc.

Aie is always long. General rules: All vowels immediately followed by an e mute are long: plaïe, pensēe, joïe, etc. Except when there is a liquid articulation, as in păye. But many authors change the y into i, and write païe, in which case there is no occasion for this exception.

When a vowel meets any other vowel but the mute e, it becomes short: i, for instance, is long in je līe, and short in nous lions.

Aigne is always short: châtaïgne, dédaïgne, etc.

Aigre is always short: aïgre, maïgre, etc.

Aïl is always short: General rule: All final syllables are short that end with a liquid l, eventaïl, soleïl, sĕuil, etc.

Aille is short in médăille, je travăille, détăille, émăille, băille (I give), and in all the tenses of these verbs. It is long in all other words, even before a masculine syllable: răille, rāillons, etc.

Aillet, aillir, are always short: păillet, jăillir, etc.

Aillon is short only in médăillon and batăillon; and in these verbs, nous détăillons, émăillons, travăillons, băillons (we give); but long in nous bāillons (we yawn), and in all other words.

Aim, ain, im, in. General rule: All nasal terminations, followed by a consonant which begins another syllable, are long: jām-be, mēn-tor, bōm-be, crāin-dre, etc.

But when the m or n of the nasal terminations is doubled, there is no nasal sound, and the vowel is short: épigrăm-me, persŏn-ne, etc.

An exact standard for this nasal sound is not to be found in the English pronunciation, though something like it is heard in the word hang. With regard, however, to this and other nasal sounds, as on, un, Mr. Walker very properly observes, that "If, in pronouncing them, the tongue should once touch the roof of the mouth (as it happens in pronouncing man, men, sin, son, sun), the French nasal sound would be ruined."

The French standard for this is in, in vin.

Aime, the only word that has this termination, is short.

---

* These rules chiefly relate to final syllables, the sound of which is more easily distinguished.

† Mr. Tardy thinks the termination in most of the verbs and substantives which end in able is long: still, the a in the French termination able being shorter than the a of the English word bat to which it refers; we have adopted the opinion which pronounces it doubtful; and as we have suppressed all doubtful sounds, as being very puzzling to the English student, we have always referred that termination to bat, in which the a has nearly the same sound as in able.

‡ A doubtful vowel is long when its word ends a sentence; in other cases it is generally short.

§ A syllable is termed feminine when it ends with an e mute, like sobre, aimes, parlent. All other terminations are masculine.

Aine is long only in hāîne, chaîne, gāîne, traîne, and in their derivatives.

Air is doubtful in the singular, and long in the plural: éclairs, etc.

Aire, ais, aix, aise, aisse, are always long: paîre, palaîs, etc.

Ait, aite, are long only in plaît, naît, repaît, faîte (top).

Aître is always long: maître, etc.

Ale is long only in hāle, pāle, un māle, rāle, and in their derivatives, hāler, pāleur, etc.

Alle is always short: măle, etc.

Am, an, em, en. This nasal vowel has four sounds; it is always long when spelt with an a, except in comptănt (ready money).*

When it is spelt with an e, it is long in the beginning, and in the middle of words, and at the end of adjectives, as in prudēnt, ensēmble, exēmpt, etc.

2dly. Generally short at the end of substantives and adverbs, as in vĕnt, sagemĕnt, etc.

3dly. Short and slender in miĕn, tiĕn, siĕn, biĕn, liĕn, riĕn, etc.

4thly. Long and slender in the plural of these words, in mĕntor, and some other words, wherein it has the sound of in, in vin.

The first sound is heard in the two syllables of ĕnfānt, and in the first of ĕncore, which the English have adopted with its nasal sound.

The second has for standard en in cĕnt. Those who can pronounce en in encore, may easily obtain its short sound by dwelling less upon it. Something like it is heard in the word sand.

The third, heard in the last syllable of lien, has something like it in the word send.

The fourth, heard in mĕntor, has the sound of in in vin. See under Aim what is said of the nasal sounds.

In this dictionary, the first three sounds of that nasal vowel are always spelt en, except after the hard g and k, where the a is better calculated to preserve the hard articulation of these two consonants.

Ame is long only in āme, infāme, blāme, il se pāme, un brāme; in the preterites, as aimāmes, etc., and in flamme, although the m be doubled.

Ane, anne, are long only in crāne āne, mānes, la mānne, une mānne, dāmne and condāmne.

Ape, appe, are long only in rāpe, and in the verb rāper.

Apre is always long.

Aque is long only in pāque and Jācques.

Ar is always short. N. B. Some authorities are for excepting char and proper names, as César, Gibraltar, etc., which are certainly pronounced long, at the end of a sentence.

Arbe. General rule: In all syllables ending with an r, and followed by another consonant which begins another syllable, the vowel is short: bărbe, bĕr-ceau, etc.

Ard, art, are doubtful. But when an e mute follows the d or t, the a is short. See Arbe, cafard, cafărde.

Are is always long: pāre; but becomes short before a masculine syllable: il păra, etc.

Arre. General rule: All vowels before rr, which form a single articulation, are long, as ārrêt, bārre, etc.

Exceptions to this rule will be found in their respective places.

Ari is long only in hourvāri.

As is generally long, as in tās, bās, ās, Pallās, etc.

Ase. General rule: S or z, between two vowels, the last of which is an e mute, lengthens and opens the penultima: bāse, pēse, etc.; but this penultima often becomes short before a masculine syllable, as in pĕser, apŭiser, etc.

Aspe. General rule: An s articulated after a vowel, and followed by another consonant, always renders the vowel short: jăspe, măsque, lŭstre, etc.

Asse is long in the substantives: bāsse, chāsse (shrine), clāsse, échāsse, pāsse, māsse (stake), and tāsse; in the adjectives bāsse, grāsse, lāsse; in the verbs cāsse, amāsse, enchāsse, compāsse, sāsse; and in their masculine terminations, cāsser, etc.; in words derived from, or composed of these verbs; also in the terminations of the subjunctive mood, aimāsse, parlāsses, chantāssent, etc. It is short in all other words.

At is long only in bāt, māt, dégāt, and in the third person singular of the preterite of the subjunctive. qu'il aimāt, etc.

Ate, ates, are long only in pāte, hāte, il appāte, gāte, māte, démāte; and in the preterite tense, chantātes, etc.

Atre, attre, is only short in quātre, bāttre, and its derivatives.

Au, a false diphthong, has the three sounds of the French o. See O.

It is generally long and open before a feminine termination or a consonant at the end of a word; in the plural number, and under the circumflex accent; as in āuge, chāud, māux, etc.

It is short in Păul, and before two consonants, as in ăugmenter, etc.

It is long and broad before re, as in restāure, etc.; in all other cases it is generally doubtful, as in audace, épauler, joyau, etc.

Ave is short in răve, căve, etc.; frequently long, as in grāve, entrāve, etc.; and doubtful in brave and Batave.

Avre is always long: cadāvre, etc.

Ax, axe, are always short: thorăx, parallăxe, etc.

The French Academy admits three sounds of the letter e: the close, the open, and the mute.

But the open may be more or less so. It is a little open in ferme, and entirely so in procès. When it is a little open, the Academy calls it open acute, and assigns for its standard the first e in trompette. Dumarsais, and others, call it the common or middle e: when it is entirely open, it is called open grave. Therefore we must distinguish three masculine é's, viz., the close, the open acute, and the open grave.

These are termed masculine, in opposition to the mute e, the sign of the feminine gender in most adjectives, and all past participles.

The close é is so called from its being pronounced with the mouth almost closed, and from its slender sound.

It may be deemed short, if compared with its feminine termination, wherein the e mute obliges us to dwell somewhat more upon it, as is obvious in aisé, aisée; but it is long, if compared with the open acute, which is shorter, though it frequently bears the same accent. This is observable in créé, wherein the first é is somewhat more open than the last, and evidently shorter, according to the general rule which is to be found after the termination éé. See Éé.

The natural standard for this é is the primitive sound by which it is known in the French alphabet as in bonté, and answers to the first letter in the English alphabet, as in fate.

The open acute é, so named from being somewhat more open than the close é, and from the acute accent which it frequently bears, is always short. It is found in the first é of créé or trompette, and is the same as in the English words, met, ebb.

The open grave è is so called from requiring a greater opening of the mouth, and from the grave or circumflex accent which generally attends it, as in après and tête. It is similar in sound to the English e in there.

The mute e is a mere emission of the voice, and is so very imperceptible to the ear, that the difference between froc and froque, crêp and crêpe, can only be decided by the spelling.

* Am, an, em, en, these four terminations are undoubtedly different in their sounds, but the difference is so little that only a native can distinguish it, and in a hundred English students, not one perhaps would be able to find it out: we have therefore referred them all to an of the French word antique.

Dumarsais thinks that the articulation of the consonant by which it is preceded, is sufficient to express it, as in mner, and dmender, the figured spelling of mener and demander. In monosyllables, however, and in the first syllables of other words, the imperfect sound of this letter is more perceptible, and may be termed guttural.

At the end of polysyllables, where it is entirely mute, it is like the second e in there, and generally serves to lengthen or open the preceding vowel: when it is more perceptible, it is like the e in battery or over; and even then the French suppress it as often as they can, especially when the preceding or following syllable has a full sound.

P. Catineau, who has written on this subject, gives the following example, which is very correct: "Quand vous serez le même, vous me trouverez le même. This sentence contains thirteen syllables in prose, quand-vous-se-rez-le-même-vous-me-trou-ve-rez-le-même. In poetry même would have two syllables. However, in familiar reading and conversation, it is pronounced in eight syllables only, quand-vou-srel-même-voum-trouv-rel-même." The suppression of this e is precisely the reason why foreigners imagine that the French speak so very quick.

This imperfect sound would be insupportable in two syllables together at the end of a word. To avoid this dissonance, therefore, the mute e is changed into an open è, in the penultima of verbs, as in mène from mener; in tienne from tenir, where the consonant is doubled, producing the same effect; while in others the e is changed into the diphthong oi, as in doivent from devoir.

When the pronoun je comes after its verb, it produces the same effect, so that je chante, je mène, become chanté-je? mené-je? And in this case the guttural e of mener that had become open acute in méne, becomes again guttural in mené-je?

E, when under the acute accent, is generally close at the end of words, as bonté, aisé; 2dly, in adverbs derived from adjectives ending in é, as aisément; 3dly, before the feminine termination of adjectives, where it is somewhat longer, as in aisée; in every other place it is almost always open acute.* It is close likewise in the termination ez and er, when the r is silent; and open acute in any other place where it is not open grave, or doubtful.

It is generally open grave under the circumflex and grave accent; and sometimes doubtful, as will be seen hereafter.

N. B. The following rules relate to the open acute é, and to the open grave, when the word close is not mentioned.

Ecle, ebre, ec, ece, are always short: bĕc, nièce, etc.

Eche is long only in bêche, lêche, grièche, pêche (fishing, or peach), revêche, il pêche (he fishes), dépêche, empêche, prêche, and in all the tenses and persons of these verbs.

Ecle, ect, ete, ede, eder, are always short: siĕcle, insĕcte, cĕder, etc.

Ee is always long and close, as in animée, etc. See Aie.

Ee. General rule: All vowels before any other than the mute e, are short; crĕé, fĕal, hĕïr, etc.

Ef is always short; effe, efle, are long only in grêffe and nêfle.

Ege is always long: collège, etc. Some make it short. The prevailing custom seems to be for pronouncing it long at the end of a sentence and short in any other place.

Egle is always short: règle, sèigle, etc.

Egne is doubtful: règne, douègne, etc.

Eille is long in viêille, viêillard, viêillesse, which have the sound of the close é.

Ein, einte, are always long. See Aim.

Eine is long only in rêine.

Eitre is long only in rêitre.

Ele is long only in zêle, poêle, frêle, pêle-mêle, grêle, il se fêle, il bêle.

Em, en. See Aim and An. But there is no nasal sound in Béthléĕm, ítĕm, amĕn, hymĕn, etc. And whenever the m or n is articulated, the e is open acute.

Eme is short only in sĕme. It is doubtful in crème; and long in any other word. The terminations in ieme are frequently heard short before another word.

Ene is long only in cêne, chêne, scêne, gêne, alêne rêne, frêne, arêne, pêne, and in all proper names Enne is always short, étrĕnne, etc.

Epe is always long: crêpe, etc.

Epre is short only in lêpre, etc.

Epte, eptre, are always short: précĕpté, scĕptre, etc.

Eque is long only in évêque, archevêque.

Er is long and open in fêr, enfêr, mêr, amêr, hivêr; long and close in légêr, altiêr; and in all nouns and verbs, as aimêr, bergêr, etc., when the r is silent; but when the r is articulated, as it must be, especially in verbs, before a word beginning with a vowel, the e is open acute, and short as in the English word ebb, see Table of the Simple Sounds, p. 11. This articulation of the r, however, is principally applicable to solemn reading.

Erbe, erce, erse, erche, ercle, erde, erdre, are all short. See Arbe.

Erd, ert, are doubtful: il perd, désert, etc.

Ere is doubtful: frère, chimère, etc., but it is constantly long in the third persons plural of verbs: ils espêrent, parlêrent, etc.

Erge, ergue, erle, erme, erne, erpe, erte, ertre, esque, este, estre, are all short. See Arbe.

Erre is always long, even before a masculine syllable: guêrre, vêrrons, etc., but it is short when the two rr are heard separately, as in ĕrreur, etc.

Esse is long only in abêsse, profêsse, confêsse, prêsse, comprêsse, cêsse, lêsse, exprêsse, il s'emprêsse il profêsse.

Et is long only in arrêt, benêt, forêt, genêt, prêt aprêt, acquêt, intérêt, têt, protêt, il êst.

Ete is long only in bête, fête, arbalête, boête, tempête, quête, conquête, enquête, requête, arrête, crête, tête; it is doubtful in êtes and honnête, and short in all the rest.

Etre is long only in être, salpêtre, ancêtre, fenêtre, prêtre, champêtre, nêtre, chevêtre, guêtre, je me dépêtre.

Eu. This diphthong has three different sounds: it is long and close in jêune (fasting), short in jĕune (young); long and open in bêurre.

The first has no standard in English; but it may be obtained by pressing the lips a little forward, in such a manner as to leave to the breath a narrower passage than for the e of over, and by dwelling longer upon it.

The second is somewhat more open than the e of over, and can hardly be distinguished from it.

The third may be obtained by opening the lips somewhat wider, and in a more circular form, than for the e of over, and by protracting the sound.*

* It has been thought proper to adhere to the ancient custom of writing this second e with the acute accent, to avoid the double mistake frequently occasioned by those who of late have written it with the grave accent, in some terminations, as ece, éde, etc. Those who are unacquainted with M. d'Olivet's rules, being misled by the grave accent, give to that é the sound of the open grave è, whilst on the other hand, they are induced to confound with the close é all the open acute ones, which have not been subjected to this partial reform. A little attention to the above rule will be sufficient to prevent the mistaking of the close é for the open acute. As to the exceptions to this or any of these rules, the similar spelling of every word will remove all doubts.

* No grammarian, I believe, has ever distinguished the third sound, so different from the two first. Hence some pronounce bêurre, lêurre, etc., with the sound of eû in jeûne, which is a very vicious pronunciation; for in French, as in English, the r generally opens the sound of the preceding vowel By others, and specially by foreigners, feux, aïeux

Eu, unless accented, is short in the beginning and in the middle of words: hĕureux, amĕuter, etc.; it is doubtful at the end, feu, jeu, etc., and when it is long it has the close sound of eu in jeûne, unless it be followed by an r.

Euf is always short: nĕuf, vĕuf, etc.

Eule is long only in mēule.

Eune is long only in jēûne (fasting).

Eur is generally short, lĕur, pĕur, etc.; it is doubtful in cœur, chœur, sœur, and long open in all plural nouns.*

Eure is doubtful, but always open, heure, infĕrieure, etc.

Eux, euse, are always long and close: fēux, jēux, heurēuse, etc.

Eve is long only in trēve, grēve, rēve, rēver; it is doubtful in fève, brève, il achève, crève, se lève, although mute in crever, achever, se lever.

Evre is doubtful, lèvre, sèvre, etc.

Ex, exe, are always short, perplĕx, sĕxe, etc.

---

N. B. All the terminations of the three following vowels not noticed in these Rules, are constantly short.

I has two sounds; it is long in gīte, and short in amĭ. The standard for the first, in English, is ie in field, and of the second i in fig.

Idre is long only in hīdre and cīdre.

Ie is always long. See Aie.

Ien, when it is a dissyllable, both syllables are short, as in lĭ-ĕn; but it is doubtful when it is a monosyllable, as in mien, tien, etc.; when it is long it has the sound of in in vin. See An.

Ige is doubtful, as in tige, prodige, litige, il oblige, etc.

Ile is long only in īle, huīle, tuīle, presqu'īle.

Im, in. See Aim.

Imes is long only in abīme, dīme, and in the preterite tense, vīmes, prīmes, etc.

†Ire is doubtful: empire, soupire, etc., but always long in the preterite tense, prīrent, punīrent, etc.

Ise is always long: surprīse, etc.

Isse is only long in these terminations of the subjunctive, fīsse, prīsses, punīssent, etc.

It is long only in the preterite of the subjunctive: qu'il prīt, qu'il fīt, etc.

Ite is long in bénīte, gīte, vīte, and in the preterite tenses, vītes, finītes, etc.

Itre is long in epītre, huītre, lītre; but short in regĭtre and all the rest.

Ive is long only in adjectives: vīve, craintīve, etc.

Ivre is long only in vīvres.

O has three sounds; it is long and open in trône, and short in nŏble. It is long and broad when the o precedes the final syllable re, adōre, flōre, aurōre; when the or is connected with the following consonant, as in corps, alors, fort; as also when it constitutes a word, or.‡

N. B. This third sound has not been noticed by any grammarian. It would, however, be highly improper to pronounce the o in aurore, corps, alors, etc., like the o in trône or nōble.

The standard in English is, for the first, o in robe; for the second, o in rob; for the third, o in lord.

O in the beginning of a word, is long only in ōs ōsier, ōter, hōte.

Obe is long only in glōbe and lōbe.

Ode, oge, are long only in rōde, dōge.

Oi, a diphthong that sometimes has the sounds of wa in wār, or wăr; sometimes those of e in there or ebb. It is doubtful at the end of words, where it has always the sounds of wā or wă, moi, toi, roi, etc.

Oie is always long: jōie, etc.

Oient, a false diphthong, that has always the sound of the open grave e, ils aimōient, etc.

Oin, a diphthong, which has the sound of in in vin, preceded by the English w. See Aim.

Oir is doubtful: savoir, espoir, etc.

Oire is always long: bōire, mémōire, etc.

Ois, oise, oisse, oitre, oivre, are always long, whether they have the sound of wā, or of an open grave è.

Oit is long only in il parōit, connōit and crōit (he increases).

Ole is long only in drōle, pōle, geōle, mōle, rōle, contrōle, il enjōle, enrōle, vōle (he steals).

Om, on. This nasal vowel has no exact standard in English; but something like it is heard in song. See Aim. In French its standard is on, in mon, and it is always long.

Ome is short only in Rŏme. Omme is always short.

One is always long when the n is not doubled: trōne, etc.

Or is always short, according to M. d'Olivet. Some think it short only in castŏr, butŏr, encŏr; but longer in all the other words, when r is followed by a d or a t. This latter opinion, seems to prevail, especially when the word ends a sentence. Therefore, o in or, essor, port, bord, etc., should be placed in the class of the doubtful vowels.

Ore is always long and broad: encōre, évapōre, etc. But it becomes short before a masculine syllable, évapŏrer, etc.; unless followed by two rr, which form a single articulation, as in éclŏrrai, etc.

Os, ose, are always long: repōs, oppōse, etc.

Osse is long only in grōsse, fōsse, endōsse, engrōsse, and in their derivatives, which preserve the o long even before a masculine syllable: grōsseur, etc.

Ot is long only in impōt, lōt, depōt, entrepōt, suppōt, prevōt, rōt.

Ote is long only in hōte, côte, maltōte, ōte. The three last preserve the o long before a masculine syllable: côté; ōter, maltōtier, etc.

Otre is long in apōtre, nōtre and vōtre.

Ou, a false diphthong, which is long in roūle, and short in bŏule.

The first has for its standard, in English, the two oo in mōod; the second, the two oo in gŏod.

Oudre, oue, are always long: moūdre, je loūe, etc.

Ouille is long only in rōuille, il dérōuille, embrōuille, débrōuille; but becomes short before a masculine syllable, rŏuiller, brŏuillon, etc.

Oule is long only in mōule (muscle), la foule sōule, il foule, écrōule, rōule.

Oure is doubtful: bravoure, etc.

Ourre is always long; but ourr becomes short before a masculine syllable, contrary to the rule after arre; bŏurrade, cŏurrier.

Ousse is long only in pōusse.

Out is long only in aōut, côut, gōut, mōut.

Oute is long in absōute, jōute, crōute, vōute; ü côute, brōute, gōute, ajōute; but mostly short before a masculine syllable: jŏuter, etc.

Outre is long only in pōutre and côutre.

U has two sounds; it is long in būse, and short in bŭt.

There is no standard for these sounds in English To form the first, observe the situation of the tongue when you pronounce the English letter e généreux, jeûne, etc., are pronounced with the sound of eu in beurre, which is no less exceptionable.

* The French termination eur undergoes so trifling a change in its plural, that we have made no difference in them, and refer both singular and plural to eu of beurre.

† Ir. This termination not being noticed here, it must, according to Mr. Tardy, be short; however, the sound of this termination, in most of our verbs, is longer than the i of bit, to which it refers, and not quite so long as ie of field; but we have adhered to this termination, as being more nearly allied to the French sound than the other.

‡ We have made use of a fourth termination, to represent the sound of o when it is as open but not so long as o in trône; which is generally the case when the o is followed by no consonant, or when the consonant that follows is mute, as in vos, héros, mot, in which the o is as open but somewhat shorter than the o in the word robe, to which it was constantly referred.

It w mens itself into the cheeks, so that it touches the first grinders. When the tongue is in this situation, advance both lips a little forward, shutting them at the same time in such a manner as to leave a narrow oval passage for the breath. This movement will lightly press the tongue between the grinders, and its tip against the fore-teeth of the inferior jaw, and thus let pass what breath is necessary to emit the sound of the French u. Its short sound is formed by dwelling less upon it.

Uche is long only in būche, embūche, débūche.

Ue is always long: vūe, tortūe, etc.

Uge is doubtful: déluge, juge, etc.

Ule is long only in brūle, and in all the tenses of brūler.

Um, un. See Aim. This nasal vowel has no standard in English. Its sound is formed by lowering the inferior part of the mouth somewhat more than for the pronunciation of u, making at the same time the opening of the lips more circular, and throwing the breath against the interior part of the roof, whilst the tongue touches lightly the grinders in removing a little from the fore-teeth of the inferior jaw.

Umes is long only in preterite tenses: parūmes, reçūmes, etc.

Ure is always long: injūre, parjūre, etc.

Usse, usses, ussent, are always long, except in la Prūsse, les Rūsses.

Ut is long only in fūt (hogshead), affūt; and in the preterite of the subjunctive, qu'il fūt, etc.

Ute is long only in flūte, and in preterite tenses, lūtes, parūtes, etc.

N. B. Few of these rules are without some exceptions. These exceptions, together with the pronunciation of the proper and improper diphthongs not noticed in these rules, and likewise the various articulations of consonants, are shown in the similar spelling of their respective words.

But as words are spelt as they are pronounced when alone, or before a consonant, we shall particularly notice here the final consonants which cease to be silent when they meet a word beginning with a vowel.

Directions for the Articulation of the final consonants before a vowel or h mute.

1st General Rule: Final consonants are to be articulated before a word beginning with a vowel or h mute.*

2d General Rule: All final consonants that are articulated when the word stands alone, or before the consonant of another word, preserve the same articulation before a vowel. The exceptions will be remarked in the following observations.

B is articulated only in radoub, and proper names, even before a consonant.

C. When the final c is articulated, it has the articulation of a k.

It is always silent in accroc, arsenic, broc, cotignac, marc (weight or sediment), estomac, lacs (love-knots); in the last syllable of succinct, and of porc-épic; and after the nasal sounds, as banc, convainc, etc.

However, it is articulated in donc at the beginning of a sentence and before a vowel; also in francencens, franc-alleu, du blanc au noir.

D. When the final d is heard before a vowel or h mute, it has the articulation of a t.

It is always silent in sourd, nid, in the terminations in ond, rond, etc., and after an r, as in fuyard accord, etc.

In other words it is frequently suppressed in conversation.

It should never be suppressed, 1st, in de fond en comble; 2d, after quand, before il, ils, eux, elles, on, en, a, au, aux; 3d, after adjectives followed by their substantives: grand homme, grand arbre, etc.; 4th, after the third person of verbs, when they are followed by their pronoun personal or the preposition à; répond-il? il entend à demi, etc.

F. The final f is generally articulated even before a consonant.

It is silent, even before a vowel; 1st, in baillif, clef, cerf; 2d, in chef and nerf when used in the following expressions, chef d'œuvre, nerf de bœuf, although it must be articulated in any other place; 3d, in plural nouns, as bœufs, œufs, etc.; except in chefs and corne de cerf, wherein it is always articulated.

G. The final g, when it is not silent, has the articulation of a k.

It is articulated, 1st, in sang and rang before an adjective, sang échauffé, rang élevé, etc.; 2d, in these or similar sentences, suer sang et eau, de rang en rang, etc.; 3d, always in bourg.

According to some, it is also heard in long before a substantive: long été, etc., which may be spelt lon-été. The word long before a vowel is generally avoided, or the g suppressed in the pronunciation.

In joug some pronounce it as g in bag, even before a consonant; others suppress it even before a vowel.

H seldom is, and never ought to be, final in French. It has no articulation.

When it is deemed aspirate, "it only communicates to the vowel the properties of a consonant; that is to say, if the preceding word ends with a vowel, that vowel is never suppressed; if it ends with a consonant, that consonant is never connected with the vowel which follows. To this is confined all the effect of the aspirated h."—D'Olivet.

This pretended aspiration, so different from that of the English, is nothing else than the hiatus occasioned by the meeting of two vowels, as in go on, go again.

N. B. The h is preserved in the similar spelling only in words before which no vowel is suppressed, and with which no consonant is connected.

It is proper to notice here some irregularities of this letter.

In conversation or prose h is mute in Henri; it may be aspirated in poetry.

According to the Academy, it is better to aspirate it in hideux. The contrary custom still prevails.

It is aspirated in Hollande and Hongrie, but mute in toile or fromage d'Hollande, reine or point d'Hongrie.

It is mute in huit and its derivatives; however we spell and pronounce le huit, le huitième, la huitaine, as if it were aspirated.

Onze and its derivatives, and oui used substantively, produce the effects of the aspirated h. The vowel is not suppressed before these words, nor any consonant connected with them, les onze, les onzièmes, etc., le oui et le non, tous vos oui, etc., although we spell and pronounce je crois qu'oui, in stead of je crois que oui.

L. The final l is never pronounced in baril chenil-

* No rule is more frequently cited, and yet few have more exceptions, even in public speaking, wherein it ought to be more strictly adhered to. On this point, harmony must be first attended to. Whenever the connection of a final consonant produces a discordant sound, it must be avoided; for, as M. d'Olivet has very properly remarked, "the French prefer an irregularity to a discordance."

In cases, however, where a disagreeable sound is not the consequence, the connection should take place, even in conversation, when the first word determines, qualifies, or modifies the second, as the article before its noun; the adjective or pronoun before its substantive; the substantive before its adjective; the noun or pronoun before its verb; the verb before its pronoun, adverb, object, or end; the adverb before an adjective or participle.

fusil, gentil, gril, outil, nombril, persil, soul, sourcil, pouls, fils, cul. But gentil in gentilhomme, and gril in verse, take the liquid articulation of gl in seraglio.

It is sometimes familiarly suppressed in quelque, quelquefois, quelqu'un; though never in quel and quelconque. To suppress the l in il dit, ils ont dit, parle-t-il? would be to imitate a pronunciation in use only with the vulgar.

M. Chambaud observes, with regard to this last point, that the l cannot be silent in reading; and that it would be better to pronounce it always, to avoid double meanings. Since this suppression of the l may occasion ambiguity, it cannot be too carefully avoided.

M. The final m is never articulated when it makes a nasal sound. It is always articulated in hem! item, and in foreign names, Amsterdam, etc. However m is silent in Adam and Absalom, which have a nasal sound.

N. The final n, when it makes a nasal sound, is articulated before a vowel only in the following cases:

1st. Adjectives before their substantives, and mon, ton, son, rien, un and bien (adverb), lose their nasal sound in connecting their n with a following vowel, as certain auteur, bon ami, rien au monde, un homme, bien-aimé, etc., pronounced cer-té-no-teur, rié-no-monde, bo-na-mi, u-nom, bié-né-mé.

2d. Benin and malin ought not to be placed before a substantive, except malin esprit, wherein malin preserves its nasal sound, and a second n is articulated before esprit, malin-nesprit. The same may be said of divin amour, divin évangile, pronounced divin-namour, divin-névangile.

3d. En and on preserve their nasal sound, but a second n is articulated before a vowel: en entrant, on assure, etc., pronounced en-nen-tran, on-na-sure. But the first after an imperative and the second after its verb, are never connected: par-lez-en à votre ami, a-t-on appris, etc.

P. The final p of coup, beaucoup and trop, and of the words that have it articulated before a consonant, are the only ones heard before a vowel.

Q. When the final q is not silent, it has the articulation of a k. It is always heard in cinq, when alone and before a vowel; also in coq.

R. The final r is generally articulated before vowels, at least in reading.

Except, 1st, monsieur and messieurs, though it be always heard in le sieur, les sieurs;

2d, The plural of nouns ending in er, wherein the s alone is articulated like a z;

3d, In conversation it is often suppressed before consonants, as in notre, votre, quatre, pronounced not, vot, quat; but never in notre Père qui êtes aux cieux, Notre-Dame, quatre-vingts, nor at the end of a sentence;

4th, Sometimes also it is suppressed in conversation in the verbs and nouns ending in er; but never in proper names, words derived from foreign languages, nor when the è is open grave, as in Jupiter, pater, mer, etc.

5th, Some suppress it in words ending in ir; but it is not the prevailing custom.

S. The final s, in reading, is always heard before a vowel. It is articulated as in yes, even before a consonant, in the words vis and cens; and in the Latin and proper names, Pallas, bolus, etc.

In every other word, before a vowel, it has the articulation of a z, in which case it is often suppressed in conversation; but this would be a fault in reading.

T. The t final is generally articulated before a vowel; except,

1st, When it is preceded by another consonant: respect humain, effort étonnant, etc.

2d, In quatre-vingt-un, quatre-vingt-onze, though it be articulated in vingt et un, and even before consonants in the following numbers, up to vingt-neuf inclusively;

3d, In all plural nouns, and in et, teint, contrat, moût, têt, protêt, puits;

4th, It is silent in fort (adjective), fort et grand, but articulated in fort (adverb), fort aimable.

X. The final x is always articulated, 1st, like ks in Greek and Latin words: Styx, préfix, in the word Cadix; like z in Aix; like double s in Aix-la-Chapelle; and like gz when followed by a vowel, as in exercice, exempt: egzercice, egzempt.

Z is silent before a vowel only in the word nez; it is frequently suppressed at the end of other words in conversation; but these and similar licenses, though tolerated, can never be enforced as rules.

PRONUNCIATION

THE TERMINATIONS OF THE FRENCH VERBS.

Ai ending the preterite and the future is sounded like é. Ex.: j'aimai, je donnerai.

Ais, ait, aient, ending the imperfect and conditional present, are sounded like è. Ex.: j'avais, j'aurais.

Er, ending a verb, before a consonant is sounded like é

Ez, ending the second person plural, is sounded like é. Ex.: ayez.

R is the only consonant to be sounded at the end of verbs. Therefore do not sound c, cs, ds, ps, t, x, in vainc, vaincs, prends, romps, as, bats, peux, veux, vaux, etc.; sound r in avoir, punir, voir, sers, sert, perd, offert, sort, meurs, meurt, etc. But r is not to be sounded in er ending the verbs of the first conjugation. Ex.: donner, parler, etc.: er in this case is sounded like é.

REMARKS ON THE FRENCH VERBS.

The French verbs are generally divided into four conjugations: those ending in er belong to the first; those in ir to the second; those in oir to the third; those in re to the fourth. They are either regular or irregular, and the three preceding pages show how they are conjugated in all their forms.

Ant is the termination of the present participle without any exception. Ex.: ayant.

The imperfect tense of the indicative mood always ends in ais, ais, ait, ions, iez, aient; it is conjugated like je donnais, and is generally formed by changing ant of the present participle into ais, etc., as, donnant, je donnais, etc.

The preterite of the indicative ends in four different ways: 1st, in ai, as, a, âmes, âtes, èrent, as je donnai, etc., verb 3; 2d, is, is, it, îmes, îtes, irent, as je punis, etc., verb 4; 3d, in us, us, ut, ûmes, ûtes, urent, as je reçus, etc., verb 5; 4th, in ins, ins, int, înmes, întes, inrent, as je tins, tu tins, il tint, nous tînmes, vous tîntes, ils tinrent, verb 21.

The future always ends in rai, ras, ra, rons, rez, ront, is conjugated like je donnerai, and is generally formed by changing the terminations r, oir, and re of the present infinitive, into rai, etc. Ex.: donner, donnerai, punir, punirai, devoir, devrai, vendre, vendrai.

The conditional present always ends in rais, rais, rait, rions, riez, raient, is conjugated like je donnerais, and has its first person formed by adding s to rai of the future.

In the imperative mood, present tense, the second person singular, the first and second persons plural are like the same persons of the indicative mood, present tense, except in the verbs avoir, to have, être, to be, and savoir, to know, which has sache, sachons, sachez. The third persons, singular and plural, of this tense, are like the same persons of the subjunctive mood, present tense. Ex.: qu'il ait, qu'ils aient. Those verbs which have es at the end of the second person singular of the indicative mood and the verb aller, lose the final s in the same person of the imperative, except before y and en. Ex.: donne, donnes-en, cueille, cueilles-en, va, vas-y, etc.

The present of the subjunctive mood ends in e, es, e, ions, iez, ent, except only in avoir and être, and is conjugated like que je donne, etc., verb 3. The verbs of which the first person is printed in italics in the present of the subjunctive, have in the first and second persons plural irregularities, which are shown in the last column of page 13. The first person singular of this tense may generally be obtained by changing ant of the present participle into e.

The imperfect tense of the subjunctive mood always ends in sse, sses, t, ssions, ssiez, ssent, and is conjugated like que je donnasse, verb 3; its first person can always be obtained by changing the last letter of the preterite of the indicative into sse. Ex.: donnai, donnasse, punis, punisse, etc.

The preceding remarks show that the first person singular of the imperfect indicative, preterite, future, conditional present, present and imperfect of the subjunctive mood being once known, the other persons of the same tenses may most easily be obtained.

IRREGULARITIES.

In the verbs ending in eler, conjugated like appeler, verb 73, the l is doubled before e mute, that is to say, before e, es, ent, final, and in the whole of the future and conditional present. In the verbs ending in eter, conjugated like jeter, verb 75, the t is doubled before e mute. In the verbs conjugated like peler, verb 74, acheter, verb 76, espérer, verb 77, the e or é of the penultimate syllable becomes è before e mute, that is to say, before e, es, ent, final, and in the whole of the future and conditional present. In the verbs ending in ger the g must preserve its soft sound, for this reason, the e is not dropped before a, o. Ex.: manger, verb 79, mangeant, mangeons. Those verbs which end in yer, in the infinitive mood, present tense, or in yant, in the present participle, change the y into i before e mute. Ex.: essayer, verb 80, essaie, fuyant, que je fuie, ayant, aie. When c soft occurs in a verb in the infinitive mood, it must preserve the sound of s through the verb, and take, therefore a cedilla before a, o, u. Ex.: avancer, verb 78, avançant, recevoir, reçu, reçois.

DICTIONNAIRE FRANÇAIS ET ANGLAIS.

A s. m. an A. Il ne sait ni a ni b, he does not know a from b. Il n'en a pas fait une panse d'a, he has done nothing of his work as yet. Il n'y a pas fait une panse d'a, he has had no hand in it. Être marqué à l'a, to be a man of honour. When A means the letter a, or when it is the third person of the verb avoir, to have, it takes no accent. In all other cases and significations it takes the grave accent thus, à.

A a, has. Il a, he has. Il y a, there is, there are. Il y a un homme, there is a man. Il y a des hommes, there are men. Vide the verb AVOIR.

À, prep. marks so many different relations, expressed in English by so many different prepositions, that it will be proper to give its significations in detail.

1. À denotes the end or term of the action of the verb. À Dieu, to God. Dire un mot à quelqu'un, to speak a word to one.

[When à is construed with the article le, both are contracted into au before a consonant: au livre, to the book; à la, are never contracted: à la femme, to the woman; but à les, either before a consonant or a vowel, are always contracted into aux: aux livres, to the books; aux femmes, to the women.]

2. À frequently serves to denote extraction, separation; in this case à is to be translated by from. Ôter une bague à quelqu'un, to take a ring from one.

3. À often denotes property, possession. Ce livre est à ma sœur, this book is my sister's. Cette ferme appartient à mon père, that farm belongs to my father. Votre devoir, à tous, est de lui obéir, your duty, all of you, is to obey him.

4. À denotes period, time, at, in, on À l'aube du jour, at dawn of day. Au mois de mai, in the month of May. À mon arrivée, on my arrival.

5. À also indicates an object adhering to the outside of any thing. Il a une bague au doigt, he has a ring on his finger.

6. À also indicates what passes within or in any given place. Il est blessé à l'épaule, he is wounded in the shoulder.

7. À establishes the relative distance between things. Il était à dix pas de nous, he was within ten paces of us.—LOCUTIONS. À son nez et à sa barbe, under his nose and to his very face. Au grand jour, in open day. Coucher à la belle étoile, to lie in the open air.

8. À, relation between persons, by between. D'homme à homme, between man and man.

9. À, denoting interval, and preceded by the proposition de, is translated by to. De Paris à Genève, from Paris to Geneva.

10. À, intimating proportion, to. Un est à deux comme deux est à quatre, what one is to two, two is to four.

11. À, inferring junction, opposition, to. Bout à bout, end to end. Corps à corps, man to man. Quatre à quatre, four all; sept à point, seven to nothing; huit à rien, eight love,—are terms used in gaming.

12. À specially points out whatever furnishes an inference or ground for conjecture, translated, by. À l'œuvre on connait l'ouvrier, the workman is known by his work.

13. À, denoting succession, order, by. Peu à peu, petit à petit, by little and little. Un à un, one by one.—LOCUTION. Traduire mot à mot, et mot pour mot, to translate word for word.

14. By is the proper translation of à used in the case of goods bought or sold by weight, measure or quantity. Vendre de la viande à la livre, to sell meat by the pound.

15. À, denoting value, price, translated, at. Dîner à trois francs par tête, to dine at three francs a head.

16. À, denoting conformity, translated in or after. À l'instar de la capitale, after the manner of the capital. Être à la mode, to be in the fashion.

17. À denotes the attitude of the body, or the motion of any particular member, translated on, with. Aller à pied, à cheval, to go on foot, to ride on horseback. Recevoir à bras ouverts, to receive with open arms.—LOCUTIONS. Se jeter à corps perdu, to run headlong. Marcher à reculons, to walk backwards.

18. À denotes the instrument, the matter, and is translated by with. Mesurer à l'aune, to measure with an ell, a yard. Tracer au crayon, to trace with the pencil.—LOCUTION. Peindre à l'huile, to paint in oil. Jouer aux cartes, to play at cards.

19. À, between two nouns, makes the second serve to denote the species or quality of the first. Canne à sucre, sugar-cane. Vache à lait, milch-cow.

20. À, between two nouns, denotes the form, structure, or what is merely accessary to a thing. Lit à colonnes, a four-post bed. Boîte à double fond, a box with a false bottom.

21. À, in the same situation, points out the purpose, the use. Terre à blé, corn land. Marché à la volaille, poultry market.

22. À, when placed between a noun and an infinitive, the infinitive serves to denote the sort, the use of the person or thing expressed by the noun. Maître à danser, à écrire, à chanter, a dancing, writing, singing master.

23. À, in some elliptical phrases designates the sign of an inn, etc., as Au Cheval blanc, at the white Horse.

24. À serves to point out what is necessary in the use of a machine or of an instrument. Des armes à feu, fire-arms. Bateau à vapeur, steamboat.

25. À, between two nouns of number, signifies, between and sometimes about. Un homme de quarante à cinquante ans, a man between forty and fifty.—REMARK. We say in French, cinq à six lieues, about five or six leagues, because they are things which may be divided into fractions; but we must say cinq ou six personnes, five or six persons. Acad.

26. À, before an infinitive, most commonly denotes what is proper to be done, the merit or demerit of persons and things. Un avis à suivre, advice worth following. Un homme à récompenser, a man that deserves to be rewarded.

27. Sometimes when à comes before an infinitive, it signifies wherewith, and sometimes the verb may be resolved by the indicative with if, or by a gerund. Verser à boire, to pour out some drink. À en juger par les apparences, if we may judge by appearances. Être à l'abri, to be sheltered. Tenir à honneur, to reckon it an honour. À son compte, as he reckons. À ce que je vois, by what I see, for aught I see. Parler à tort et à travers, to speak at random.

28. Locutions where à denotes praise, blame. Honneur aux braves! honour to the brave! Gloire à Dieu! glory to God!

29. Locutions where à denotes an appeal, a rapid warning, an imprecation, a wish. À moi! à nous! au secours! help! Au voleur! thieves! Au feu! fire! À l'eau! water! À la garde! watch! Aux armes! to arms!

30. À sometimes also is a redundancy. Il faut voir à qui l'aura, we must see who shall have it.

31. À sometimes serves to form adverbial phrases. À tort, wrongfully. À la hâte, hastily. À grand' peine, hardly, with much ado. À merveille, admirably well.

32. À, a kind of interjection which signifies as much as: pray, don't talk so to me, do you take me for a dupe?

[These are the principal senses in which a may be used in abbreviations. Among the ancients, it was a numeral letter that stood for five hundred; but, with a title or a little horizontal line put over, thus: $\overline{A}$, it signified five thousand.]

A. a. a. is an abbreviation, used by chemists for, amalgamer, amalgamation and amalgame; —ā ā is another abbreviation, used in medical prescriptions for ana, signifying equal parts of each ingredient.

A. or acc. is used by merchants and book-keepers to signify, accepté, and A. P. à protester. In dictionaries and other grammatical works, A or a stands for actif. V. A. or v. a. verbe actif. A signifies likewise Altesse, as S. A. R. Son Altesse Royale; S. A. E. Son Altesse Électorale; S. A. S. Son Altesse Sérénissime; L. A. Leurs Altesses.

[Adjacent after the noun.]

ADJECTIF, àd-zèk-tîf, adj. et. s. m. (gram.) adjective.

[In French, the pronominal adjective uniformly precedes the noun, with the exception of quelconque : une raison quelconque, any reason whatever, any one reason. Aucun occasionally forms an exception, but then usually in the sense of quelconque. See AUCUN. The numeral adjective generally precedes its noun, except in cases of quotation: le premier livre, livre premier, book first. The numeral adjective uniformly follows proper names: Charles douze, François premier, Charles the Twelfth, Francis the First.

Verbal adj. formed from the pres. part. generally follow the noun: une personne séduisante, un livre attachant, un esprit rampant; except riant, charmant: une riante campagne, un charmant ouvrage. Participial adjectives follow their noun: un objet aimé, un prince redouté, un secours assuré.

Adjectives which express general qualities originating in the nature of the things themselves generally precede the nouns they qualify, when the intention of the speaker is to identify them with the persons or things in question: un bon homme, un méchant homme, une grande maison, une grosse femme, une petite fille. Thus we say honnête homme of one who possesses all the solid qualities constituting an estimable character, and homme honnête (a civil man) of him who seems anxious to please by his politeness. Upon the same principle we say un galant homme in much the same sense as honnête homme, and homme galant pretty nearly as homme honnête, with this exception, that the civilities of the former are addressed to the fair.

In the language of passion the adjective generally precedes the noun: un aimable objet, un tendre amour, de tendres regards, un adorable objet; un méchant homme, un abominable homme. The case is the same in the language of admiration: un superbe jardin, un magnifique tableau. In the language of pity: il est dans une extrême misère. Il est dans une misère extrême would merely intimate that his distress is great, without inferring any intention on the part of the speaker to interest others in that distress.

With adjectives which sometimes precede and sometimes follow the noun, there must be some analogy between the adjective and the noun to admit of the former construction: thus we cannot say un sage homme, because homme does not necessarily infer any idea of sageness or wisdom; though we can say un sage magistrat, both upon a principle of analogy and harmony. Thus adjectives expressing a quality natural to the noun or subject may be placed before it: bon vin, bon pain, mauvais vin, grand arbre, petit arbre, excellent fruit. Those again which express an accidental quality, generally follow the noun: pain bis (brown bread), pain blanc, viande dure, etc. If another adjective or any additional circumstance accompany the first class of adjectives, then both generally follow the noun: une belle ville; une ville belle et grande; du bon pain, du pain bon et bien cuit; un brave soldat, un soldat brave et intrépide. If, however, both adjectives are equally in harmony with the idea expressed by the noun, then both may precede it; thus we can say. un brave et intrépide soldat; un illustre et grave auteur; though we cannot say un illustre et classique auteur, because classique bears no necessary affinity, nor is it necessarily in harmony with the noun, in as much as it alludes rather to a class than to an individual.

Such adjectives then as denote the impression made on us by external objects never precede the noun: du pain blanc, du drap rouge, du drap bleu, une surface unie, raboteuse, dure, molle, etc.; un son aigre, une odeur forte, douce, suave. We say figuratively: une noire trahison, un noir attentat, etc. but here the adjective does not merely convey an idea of colour.

Such adjectives as express the form of objects never precede the noun: rond, carré, octogone, convexe, concave. Such adjectives as perform the part of substantives never precede the noun: palais royal (d'un roi), pompe royale (d'un roi), tendresse paternelle (d'un père), principe grammatical (de grammaire). We say bonté divine, or divine bonté, because the quality of goodness is in harmony with the nature of the Divinity.

Adjectives expressing the point of view in which we consider things or persons, never precede the noun: une chose nécessaire, possible, impossible; une idée abusive, absurde; un homme dangereux, une maladie mortelle. Mortel is frequently put before the noun, but generally in the sense of tedious, wearisome: trois mortelles lieues.

Such adjectives as express the state or situation of persons and things, those also which refer to habits, never precede the noun: un homme tranquille, calme; un homme oisif, contemplatif; un homme ivre; une vie tranquille; un homme vif, indolent, colère, entêté, etc.; du drap mince, du drap épais; un bois clair, un charbon ardent. Such as express outward or accidental modification, also follow the noun: un homme aveugle, borgne, bossu, etc.; du bois tordu; une bouteille étoilée; un bâton noueux, pointu. And in short, such adjectives as merely distinguish objects by genus, species, sort: un animal raisonnable; un homme blanc, noir, olivâtre; un arbre fruitier, un arbre sauvage; une perdrix rouge, grise; mode française, anglaise, allemande; méthode latine; accent gascon, normand, picard; musique italienne; poëme épique; nom substantif; nom adjectif; pronom personnel; verbe actif.]

AN premier, etc. referring to the republican era of France, commencing Sept 22, 1792.

[An presents an abstract, an aggregate of the year; année offers a succession of days, weeks, months, or a series of events, of effects: l'an passé on craignait la guerre; war was apprehended; when, at what period? last year. L'année passée, on a fait marcher sans cesse des troupes de province en province; here we have a succession of evolutions, of movements throughout the whole year. We say: la première année, la seconde année, meaning a succession of years as regards the effects produced within that series or succession of years, and l'an quinzième, l'an 1805, l'an 1835, as epochs or eras of time. We also say: cette année, and not cet an, because the year is not yet elapsed. For the same reason we say l'année, and not l'an commence bien; l'année, and not l'an finit bien. Le premier jour de l'an is an expression sanctioned by use, and the proof is that we cannot say le dernier jour de l'an, but de l'année. Il a quinze ans presents the aggregate of his age: il est dans sa quinzième année presents a series of years of which he has reached the fifteenth. For this reason we say: souhaiter la bonne année, to wish a good new year. Bon jour, bon an, must be considered as a popular locution. An presenting an aggregate, or a point of time, can never be accompanied by an epithet; thus we never say bon an, mauvais an, bel an, but une bonne, une mauvaise, une belle année, une année pluvieuse, etc.]

CE, CET, CETTE, pl. CES, sê, sêt, (article démonst.) this, pl. these; that pl. those. (Ce, is used before nouns masculine sing. beginning with a consonant or h aspirate): Ce livre, this or that book; (Cet is used before nouns masc. sing. beginning with a vowel or h mute:) Cet arbre, this or that tree; (Cette is used before nouns feminine singular, whether they begin with a consonant or a vowel, whether with an h aspirate or mute): Cette femme, this or that woman; (N.B. Cette, except in low language, is never pronounced s'te, but cette). Ces is used before nouns plural, either masc. or fem., with whatever letter they may begin); ces femmes, these or those women; (N.B. the above rules hold good when an adjective is inserted between the article and the substantive; then regard is paid to the initial letter of the adjective.) Cet étrange livre, that strange book; ce bel homme, that fine man. (To the substantive modified by ce, the particle ci is sometimes added to designate something near; and the particle là, to designate something distant; which answers to this and that, these and those): Ce livre-ci, this book; ce livre-là, that book; ces hommes-ci, these men; ces femmes-là, those women. (N.B. Ce, in the above capacity, is called by most grammarians a demonstrative pronoun adjective; but as it bears all the characters of the article, and some of the adjective, the denomination of article has been preferred. The demonstrative article ce, etc., can modify substantives only or words taken substantively; sometimes the modified substantive relates to another substantive expressed before, from which it must not be too distant, lest some ambiguity should arise): (Sometimes the substantive which ce modifies, is used by opposition): Je

J'ai envoyée à votre ami, cette aimable et tendre lettre, that sweet and charming letter, I have sent it to your friend. (The above article ce, may do for either the present, past, or future time, and is rendered in English accordingly, the tense of the verb showing how to render it): Il y a cette nuit, this night or to-night there is.

1. CE [pronom démonst. indécl.] he, she, it, they. (The final e of ce is cut off before a vowel, and supplied by an apostrophe, c'.) C'est un bon ami, he is a good friend. (The verb être thus construed with ce is always used in the third person, and chiefly the singular, though the following noun or pronoun be plural; sometimes the third person plural is used, but of the simple tenses only; and even the singular of the imperfect and conditional is to be preferred when eux or elles follows): ce sont de grands poètes, they are great poets. (But when no substantive follows the verb être, a pronoun personal must be used instead of ce): They are very eloquent, ils sont très-éloquents (not ce sont); he is a physician, c'est un médecin; (or adjectively), il est médecin. V. No. 5.
2. CE, it, that. C'est fait, it is done. Ce me semble, methinks. C'est vrai cela, very true! indeed. CE: C'est fait de moi, I am lost. (Sometimes the relative en is placed between ce and être): C'en est fait, 'tis past recovery. C'en est resté là, there the affair dropped. C'est bien fait à lui, he is very right. Ce dit-on; ce dit-il (style marotique), it is said; said he. Et ce, and this. En ce, in that. Outre ce, besides this. Pour ce faire, in order to accomplish it. Lettres à ce contraires, (jur.) letters contrary to this.
3. CE, he, she, they, it, that. Qui est-ce? who is he? Qui était-ce? who was it? Est-ce moi? is it I? (With a substantive, the plural of the present and future may be used): Sont-ce les Anglais? is it the English? Seront-ce les Français? will it be the French? (When a question is made with ce, it must be answered with ce likewise): C'est moi, it is I. C'est eux qui l'ont fait, it is they have done it. Sont-ce là les dames que vous attendiez? (là is a mere expletive, inserted only to facilitate pronunciation, sont-ce alone would be too harsh), are these the ladies you expected? Oui, ce sont elles, yes, they are. Est-ce un clocher? is it a steeple? Oui, c'en est un, yes, it is one. Sont-ce là vos chevaux? are these your horses? Oui, ce les sont, yes, they are.
4. CE, that, which, what. (Ce is never combined with the pronoun lequel): À ce qu'il me semble, as I think. En vertu de ce que dessus, (jur.) in virtue of what has been stipulated before or above. N.B. Formerly ce in ce qui was left out; hence this locution still in use: Qui pis est. V. PIS. Ce que requires the preposition de before an adjective. Ce que j'ai vu de beau, the fine things I saw.
5. CE QUI or CE QUE serves for two verbs, the latter of which, when ce begins the sentence, is governed by ce: now, if that latter verb is être, followed by que or de, ce must be repeated before it: Ce que je crains, c'est d'être surpris, what I fear is to be surprised. (The repetition of ce may likewise take place, when a substantive follows être): Ce qu'il demande, c'est une pension, what he asks for is a pension. (But ce cannot be repeated, when être is followed by an adjective): Ce qu'on vous a dit est vrai, what you have been told is true. Whereas we say: ce qu'on vous a dit, ce sont des contes, what you have been told is a mere story. (The reason of this difference is obvious; in the first sentence ce is the subject, and vrai the attribute; in the second, ce is the attribute, and contes the subject.) (For that very reason être, in c'est, etc., may be plural, when followed by a noun plural. V. No. 1.) (N.B. That repetition of ce forms a gallicism, which gives the language a peculiar degree of energy. The meaning of the above sentence is simply this: je crains d'être surpris; c'est une pension qu'il demande; ce sont des contes que l'on vous a dits; and still more simply for the two last: Il demande une pension; on vous a dit des contes; but they would not be so energetically expressed.) In such sentences as the above, the tense of the first verb regulates the tense of c'est, as: Ce qu'il demandait, c'était une pension. But, what is worth observing, in interrogations, c'est, followed by another verb, remains in the present: Qu'est-ce qu'il demandait? qu'est ce qu'il demandera? and the answer may be: C'est or c'était une pension; c'est or ce sera une pension. (Ce may sometimes be separated from que): Qu'est-ce donc, selon vous, qu'un ministre patriote? what do you understand then by a patriotic minister? (In interrogations, c'est is sometimes redoubled; but the first still remains in the present because it relates to the person actually speaking): Qu'est-ce que c'est? what is it? Qu'est-ce que c'était? what was it? Qu'est-ce que c'est qu'il demande? what does he ask for? Qu'est-ce que c'était qu'il demandait? what did he ask for?
6. C'EST, in all its tenses, viz. c'était, ç'a été, ce sera, ce serait, etc. separated from, though still followed by que, forms another energetic gallicism, referring to a person or thing not yet mentioned, but announced by setting forth some of its qualities or properties: C'était un grand capitaine que César, Cæsar was a great captain. (But when the thing to be mentioned, and conducted to by que, is expressed by a verb in the infinitive, the preposition de is required before that infinitive): C'est une sorte de honte que d'être malheureux, it is a kind of shame to be unfortunate. (N.B. Que in this capacity is by some grammarians called conductive; it may sometimes be dispensed with in poetry, but ought never to be omitted in prose.) To form the above gallicism, the relative qui is sometimes used, performing the same office as que, i. e. being likewise conductive: Ce fut l'orgueil qui perdit les anges rebelles, it was pride that ruined the rebellious angels. (The relative after c'est governs the next verb in the indicative, whether the sentence be affirmative or negative): C'est moi qu'on veut perdre; I am the man they wish to ruin. (The subjunctive, however, is not altogether improper, when the sentence implies something conditional, doubtful or superlative): C'est ici le principal but qu'on doive se proposer, this is the principal end that ought to be aimed at. (In sentences like the following, que, though apparently conductive, may be resolved by the relative): C'est à vous que je parle, 'tis to you I speak. C'est de leur état qu'il s'agit maintenant, 'tis their condition that is now treated of. C'est là que je les attends, there I shall have them. (In such sentences, que stands for à qui, dont, où, etc.; and the prepositions which would have governed those relatives, are prefixed to their respective antecedents.) The verbs pouvoir and devoir, in all their tenses, may likewise be construed with ce, but still immediately followed by the infinitive être: Ce doit être un tourment affreux que le souvenir d'un crime, the remembrance of a crime must be a dreadful torment. Ce pouvait être lui, he might be the man.
7. C'EST generally requires an article before the next substantive: proper names of persons and places excepted: C'est un bonheur que d'avoir échappé, 'tis good luck to have escaped. (But when the substantive pointed out by c'est expresses a sentiment or a passion of the mind, no article is required before it:) C'est folie que de sacrifier, &c., it is a folly to sacrifice, &c.
8. C'EST sometimes requires the preposition à before a noun or pronoun followed by a verb in the infinitive with à or de: C'est à lui à jouer, it is his turn to play. C'était à vous de parler, you ought to have spoken. (Sometimes the verb comes before the noun:) C'est à faire à vous, it is your business. (Sometimes there is no substantive expressed:) Si c'était à refaire, si c'était à recommencer, if it were to be done again. (But with the relative qui, the verb must be in the future:) C'est à qui fera, c'est à qui parlera, they do, they speak in emulation one of another. C'était à qui s'enfuirait, they ran away as for a wager.

9. CE M'EST, ce lui est, ce vous est, ce leur est, etc. (façons de parler qui vieillissent; on se sert aujourd'hui de la préposition pour:) C'est pour moi une grande joie (not ce m'est,) it is a great joy to me. Ce n'est pas pour vous une nouvelle, there is nothing in it for you.

10. C'EST QUE, conjonction explicative, because. Si je l'ai fait, c'est qu'il fallait le faire, if I have done it, it was because it was necessary.

11. CE N'EST PAS QUE, (autre conjonction qui régit le subjonctif à cause de la négation, et se met quelquefois à la tête de la phrase,) not that. Ce n'est pas qu'il la craigne, not that he fears her. (When the sentence implies affirmation, the verb governed by the conjunction must be preceded by ne, according to this grammatical axiom: two negatives are equivalent to an affirmative:) Ce n'est pas qu'il n'y ait parmi eux des gens du plus grand mérite, mais, etc. not that men of the greatest merit are wanting among them, but, etc. (Although the governed verb be in the past, ce n'est pas must remain in the present, when it falls upon the mere act of relating:) Ce n'est pas que l'amour de Mortimer n'eût éclaté quelquefois dans ses actions, not that Mortimer had neglected to show sometimes his love by his actions. (But when ce n'est pas falls upon the very fact mentioned, it must be in the past:) Cécile fit observer à Julie que ce n'était pas qu'elle manquât de tendresse pour lui, Cæcilia observed to Julia that it was not because she felt no tenderness for him.

12. CE QUE C'EST QUE, (devant un substantif,) CE QUE C'EST QUE DE, (devant un verbe à l'infinitif:) Ces malheureux ne savent ce que c'est que la vertu, these wretches are utter strangers to virtue. On ne savait à Rome ce que c'était que de plier sous les menaces, the Romans could never be intimidated by menaces.

13. N'ÉTAIT QUE (façon de parler qui est hors d'usage; on dit aujourd'hui si ce n'est que:) Je ne prendrais pas la peine de relever ces erreurs, si ce n'est qu'elles convainquent, &c. I would not take the trouble to reprove those errors, were they not fit to convict, &c.

14. C'EST-À-DIRE, conjonction explicative, (exprimée ordinairement en abrégé, c.-à-d.) that is to say, that is, viz., i. e. (The same order of construction must be used after this conjunction, as has been used before it, viz. articles, prepositions, etc. must be repeated:) Il ne songeait qu'à bien vivre, c'est-à-dire qu'à faire bonne chère, his chief care was to live well, that is, to make good cheer. C'EST-À-DIRE QUE, that is, that is to say. Fort bien, reprit Fabrice, c'est-à-dire qu'il l'abandonne le sang du peuple, &c. very well, replied Fabricius; he leaves then the blood of the commonalty to thee, &c. (Whatever may be the tense of the preceding verb, c'est-à-dire still remains in the present; in interrogations, however, the conditional may be used with elegance:) Serait-ce à dire que ce qui aurait duré, &c. are we then to suppose, that what has lasted, &c.

15. CE N'EST PAS À DIRE QUE, conj. it does not follow that. Ce n'est pas à dire que les traducteurs, &c. it does not follow that translators, &c.

16. C'EST POURQUOI, conj. (se met avec tous les temps des verbes; c'est ne se conjugue point) therefore, wherefore, for which reason. C'est pourquoi les Romains immolèrent des victimes, for which reason the Romans made sacrifices.

17. C'EST À SAVOIR, conj. to wit, namely; it remains to be seen whether, the question is to know whether. V. SAVOIR.

CELUI, m. CELLE, f. CEUX, CELLES, pl. sê-lûi, sêu, sêl, pron. démonstr. he, him; she, her; they, them; that, those. (This pronoun, not being a mere personal, cannot stand for a proper name; neither can it be used absolutely, but must refer to a common substantive expressed before or after, from which it should not be too distant; it must besides (having of itself a vague signification) be always immediately followed by a regimen like that of the substantive it relates to, or by the relative qui (who, that, which) beginning an incident clause). Ses regards n'étaient pas ceux d'un juge sévère, his looks were not those of a severe judge. (The substantive to which celui relates, and the substantive governed by celui, must both be pointed out by an article). Ayez de vos affaires le soin que vous devez en avoir, et laissez aux ministres celui de régler l'État, take proper care of your own affairs, and leave ministers to manage those of the state. (Whereas celui could not supply soin in this sentence: ayez soin de vos affaires, le soin should be used instead of it. (Like the other pronouns, celui is not allowed to be modified by an adjective): Le goût de la philosophie n'était pas alors le goût dominant (not celui dominant), a taste for philosophy was not at that time the prevailing taste. CELUI said of persons, may sometimes be used indefinitely, that is with no relation at all to any substantive.—Ceux qui ont vécu avant nous, those who lived before us. CELUI is sometimes left out, as: qui répond paie, the bail must pay. V. QUI. CELUI-CI, CELLE-CI; pl. CEUX-CI, CELLES-CI, pron. dem. this, these. CELUI-LÀ, CELLE-LÀ; pl. CEUX-LÀ, CELLES-LÀ, pron. demon. that, those. Celui-là n'est pas si beau, that is not so fine. Celui-ci relates to an object near the speaker; celui-là, to an object distant from him: or after two nouns already expressed, celui-ci refers to the last, celui-là to the first mentioned. (These pronouns, by virtue of the particles ci and là annexed to them, have a determined signification, consequently require no regimen, and even refuse to be immediately followed by qui: celui-là, however, admits it, but with some words between): Celui-là est heureux qui ne désire rien, he is happy who has no desires. (Yet both celui-ci and celui-là sometimes admit the relative qui, when it begins an incidental clause forming, as it were, a parenthesis, or pointing out contrast, distinction): Celui-ci, qui est déjà usé, vaut mieux que celui-là qui est tout neuf, this, though already worn, is better than that which is quite new. CELUI-LÀ in the familiar style, is sometimes used for cela. Pour celui-là, ils auraient tort, as for that, they would be wrong.

CHACUN, E, shà-kun, kûn, pron. distributif, every one, each. This pronoun has no plural, and cannot refer to a noun singular. (N. B. Chacun, said of persons, may be used either absolutely, or relatively; used absolutely, denotes sometimes a collective, sometimes an individual or distributive sense; when collective, signifies every body, every one, and is always masculine; when distributive, signifies every one, each, and takes the mark of gender.) Absol. and collectiv. — en parle, every body speaks of it. Absol. and distribut. — pour soi, every one for himself. — à son tour, each in his turn. (Chacun, said of things, is never used absolutely. —, used relatively, is said both of persons and things; is always distributive; takes the mark of gender; signifies every one, and mostly each; requires the preposition de before the noun or pronoun which it is to distribute; but never, admits of en for its antecedent); — de nous fait, etc., every one of us does. J'en ai donné à — d'eux, (said of persons, not of things), I gave some to each of them. Voilà trois cartes, je mets une guinée sur —e (not d'elles, because eux and elles cannot be said of things), there are three cards, I stake three guineas upon each of them. (Chacun is sometimes used by apposition, or rather there is an ellipsis of the preposition de and its regimen): Ces canifs coûteni un schelling —, these penknives cost a shilling each or apiece; (which has the same import as: Chacun de ces canifs coûte un schelling; but chacun coûte, etc., cannot be said): Qu'on s'en retourne — chez soi, let every one return to his own house. (Chacun used by apposition, sometimes meets with a noun pointed out by a possessive. Now, when chacun relates to either the subject or term of the sentence, the possessive must be of the same person as that subject or term): Ils auront — leur part, each of them will have his share. (But when chacun relates to the object of the sentence, if that object be of the first or second person, the possessive must agree with it; if of the third, and said of things, the possessive must be of the third person singular; but if it be said of persons, and the subject of the sentence be itself of the third person singular, leur may be used, to avoid ambiguity; or another turn must be given to the expression): Dieu nous récompensera, — selon nos œuvres, God will reward each of us according to his works. Dieu les récompensera — selon leurs œu- vres, God will reward each of them according to his works. Ils ont tous apporté des offrandes, — selon ses moyens et sa dévotion (here chacun is said of persons, and is, as it were, the subject of another sentence, viz. Chacun le fait, etc.) they have all brought offerings, each of them according to his ability and devotion. (With verbs absolute or neuter, that is, having no objective regimen, son, sa, ses or leur, leurs, may be used indifferently): Tous les juges ont opiné, — selon leurs ou ses lumières, every judge spoke according to his judgment. (In this sentence however, leur would be rather improper.) UN CHACUN ne se dit plus. — jour, chacun an, au lieu de chaque jour, chaque année, n'est que du style de Palais.

COMPARANT, s. m. (jur.) act to show cause. Présenter un —, to sue for redress.

COMPARATI-F, VE, kon-pâ-râ-tif, tiv, adj. comparative.

[Comparatif: wherever there is a comparison of excess or deficiency, the verb constituting the term of comparison is generally preceded by ne: il est plus vertueux que vous ne croyez. We say generally, let it be observed, for the verb sometimes follows the pronoun without the particle ne: on ne peut être plus occupé que nous le sommes tous deux de vous. In the former example there is an idea of opposition or negation, if not in the subordinate proposition itself, at least in the mind of the speaker, and that idea is tantamount to: vous ne croyez pas qu'il soit vertueux. In the latter example the negation or opposition constitutes no part of the subordinate proposition, which is tantamount to: nous sommes occupés de vous, les autres pas autant. It must not, however, be supposed that because the first proposition is negative, the second ought to be positive. The negative may exist syntactically in the first, and syllepticaly or by substitution in the second: Les Spartiates ne sont pas plus étonnés de se voir mourir, qu'ils ne l'avaient été de se trouver en vie, the Spartans are not astonished at finding themselves on the point of death; why should they? they were never astonished to find themselves alive. The negative of the second proposition is a syllepsis, or conception of the sense of the words otherwise than the words import. The ne disappears in all cases where the verb is accompanied by a conjunction: il est plus vertueux que lorsque vous l'avez connu.]

COMPARATIVEMENT, kon-pâ-râ-tiv-mân, adv. comparatively.

COMPARER, kon-pâ-râ, v. a. v. 3, to compare, to make a comparison. Anatomie comparée, comparative anatomy.

[Comparer à, comparer avec: comparer à supposes an analogy or affinity between the objects of comparison; comparer avec supposes that the objects compared have no affinity whatever. Comparer Virgile à Homère, to compare Virgil to Homer, supposes the two poets to be alike, and that investigation will prove the resemblance. Comparer Virgile avec Homère, to compare Virgil with Homer, supposes the merit, etc. of the poets to be different, and that investigation will prove the difference. Comparons les œuvres de la nature aux ouvrages de l'homme, œuvres and ouvrages bear a sufficient relation of resemblance to warrant the use of à. Que l'on compare la docilité du chien avec la férocité du tigre; docilité is sufficiently opposed to férocité to require the preposition avec. Vous osez vous comparer à moi! and not avec moi! that is, dare you suppose we have any thing in common to justify a comparison between us?]

COMPAROIR, kon-pâ-rwâr, v. n. v. 5, (used only in the inf.) (jur.) to appear, to make one's appearance in a court of justice.

[Composé, compound, a grammatical term. In words compounded of two nouns; there is generally an ellipsis: Hôtel-Dieu, fête-Dieu, evidently mean hôtel de Dieu, etc., and in that case the sign of the plural belongs to the first, hôtels-Dieu, fêtes-Dieu, etc. When the ellipsis consists of a suppression both of the preposition and noun, the compound noun always remains singular, as the plural belongs to the noun suppressed or understood: des reine-claude, that is des prunes de la reine Claude. The case is the same with the noun, tête-à-tête, des tête-à-tête, that is, conversations, interviews held tête-à-tête. We say des petits-maîtres, both adjective and noun in the plural, because the sense is complete. But we say des blanc-bec, des rouge-gorge, both adjective and noun in the singular, because we mean neither white bills, nor red breasts, but des jeunes gens and des oiseaux so called. We say des chefs-lieux, both with the plural mark, because chef was formerly used as an adjective. In nouns compounded of a verb and noun, the real noun is frequently understood, thus we say des abat-jour, that is des fenêtres; des boute-feu, that is, des hommes; des coupe-gorge, that is, lieux où l'on coupe la gorge. The real noun is frequently expressed and the sense complete, in which case the noun may take the sign of the plural, if, in analysing the compound word, it really represents a plural. Thus we say des chasse-mouches, that is qui chasse les mouches, though we cannot say des abat-jours, in consequence of the ellipsis above mentioned, and because it is an instrument qui abat le jour, and not les jours. In the above class of nouns the verb remains invariable of course. If compounded of a preposition or an adverb with a noun, there is no ellipsis, and the noun alone takes the mark of the plural des contre-coups, etc. Compound nouns from foreign languages never take the sign of a plural: des Te-Deum, des mezzo-termine, des auto-da-fé.]

CROIRE À QUELQUE CHOSE, to believe in, to have faith in, to put trust in. CROIRE, to think, to presume, to be of opinion.

[Croire, affirmatively, governs the indic.: je crois qu'elle est aimable; negatively, requires the subj.: je ne crois pas qu'elle soit aimable. If we put a question with a view to receive information, croire requires the subj.: croyez-vous qu'elle soit aimable; by the subj. we intimate not only that we ourselves entertain doubts, but that the person whom we address may also have his reasons for doubting. If with the interrogation we use the indicative, we ask no information, we merely intend conveying an idea of reproach: croyez-vous qu'il a de l'esprit, which is tantamount to: do you really believe him witty after all the nonsense you have heard him utter? Croyez-vous qu'il reviendra? are you kind enough to think he will come back? Croyez-vous qu'il revienne, do you believe, suppose, he will return? When the action is confined to the subject, croire governs the infinitive: je crois pouvoir vous assurer que, I think I can make you sure that; je crois devoir vous prévenir que; je croyais, je crus, j'ai cru devoir vous prévenir que, I think it my duty, I thought it my duty, I think I am bound, I thought I was bound to inform you that. Je crois gagner mon procès, je croyais gagner mon procès, j'avais cru gagner mon procès, I think I shall gain, I thought I should gain, I had thought I should have gained my lawsuit. Je crois entendre marcher, parler, I think I hear somebody walk, speak. Je croyais entendre lire, I thought I heard somebody reading. Il crut pouvoir atteindre à la perfection, he imagined he should be able to attain perfection.]

ELLE, él, pron. pers. she, her, it; pl.; ELLES, they, them. —, pronoun subject, that is, governing a verb, is said both of persons or things: as, elle est fort agréable, she is very agreeable (speaking of a woman); it is very pleasant (speaking of a house); but elle, used in a compound regimen, that is, governed by a verb and a preposition, is said of persons only, or of things personified; as, avec —, pour —, with her, for her. Je parle d'—, I speak of her. Whereas, speaking of a flower, for instance, we say, j'en parle, not je parle d'—, I speak of it. Je m'y applique, not à —s (speaking of mathematics, for instance), I apply myself to them. La terre renferme en — toutes les semences, (here terre is personified), the earth contains in itself all seeds. —, construed with à, is generally contracted into lui, when the verb is active; as, je les lui donne, not à —, I give them to her; but no contraction takes place with a verb neuter or reflected; as, je m'adresse à —, not je me lui adresse, I apply to her. Je reviens à —, not je lui reviens, I return to her. (Some verbs, however, must be excepted; as, je lui plais, I please her; je lui parle, I speak to her, with which à elle may likewise be used.) When même, self, is added to the pronoun, à — may be used with a verb active, but lui cannot be superseded, and must still precede; as, je les lui donne, à elle-même, I give them to herself. Elle is never used in a simple regimen, even for persons, but by way of redundancy, and it must always be preceded by la or les, according to the number; as, je la vois, elle et son frère, I see her and her brother. Je les vois —s et leur frère, I see them and their brother.
